To Whom It May Concern:

Neuriva is quackery and a scam. Their ingredients have a dubious mechanism by which they help memory function. No quality clinical trials have been done, so no claims of benefit could be made.

In 2021, the company settled a false advertisement class lawsuit for 8 million dollars. They deceived others with false claims that the product was "backed by science" and "clinically proven."

You sold my patient Neuriva, and are thus complicit in this fraud. Since the medication is marketed to people with memory problems, you targeted a vulnerable population who may have diminished capacity, further victimizing those who suffer memory and thinking problems. Please refund their money, apologize for your actions, and reflect on how to be better.

Sincerely yours,
